Industrial polymer problems have been an extremely rich source of fundamental research advances throughout my career. In this talk I will share some examples. These include the rheology of cross linking polymers, fundamental relations for branching and gelation, reaction injection molding, cocontinuous blends, and mixed stream recycling. These experiences have consistently reinforced the immense value of talking to industrial scientists to learn what is challenging them.